One of the least appreciated tools for learning English is the use of collocation dictionaries. A collocation can be defined as the word that goes together. In other words, some words tend to go with other words. If you think about how you use your own language for a moment, you will quickly realize that you tend to speak in phrases or groups of words that come together in your mind. We speak in blocks of language. For example, I'm tired of waiting for a bus this afternoon. An English-speaking person does not think of ten separate words, instead they think in the phrases I am tired of waiting for the bus and this afternoon. That's why sometimes you can say something correctly in English, but it just doesn't sound right. For example, I'm tired of waiting for a bus this afternoon. For a person who photographs the situation stand for the bus, it makes sense, but stands alongside in line. So while sentences make sense, it's not really accurate. They can strike up a conversation on a whim and somehow manage to find common ground with individuals from all walks of life. Traveling alone can be extremely eye-opening and enriching, but it will also equip us with the skills necessary to succeed. Communication and communication skills are attributes that can be learned and honed. These skills are applied in everyday life and can be translated into a professional environment. We were inherently closedFor my first solitary travel experience. I had just arrived in San Francisco for an externship. There was a problem with our train and we had to switch to a new train at the next platform. A gentleman who was making polite conversations decided that it was now his duty to help me move my stuff to the next training. Although also intended, I was horrified. I was unfamiliar with the kindness of strangers, in fact I thought he was trying to rob me or worse. Kindness has a regional part. And growing up in the tristate area, I was conditioned to be extremely skeptical. Interacting with strangers seems extremely taboo. It's shameful to admit, but social skills have fallen by the roadside. We forgot how to talk to each other. The idea of striking up a conversation with a stranger is terrifying borders. But more frighteningly, the lack of effective communication will eventually lead to a lonely life. Keep the passion aliveM a very wise man once said that before fully committing to someone, take them on a trip. This wise man is Bill Murray, and he's telling the truth. Traveling can be a very vulnerable time for many people, often times it can bring out the worst in humans. But if you can overcome the inevitable barriers that will arise during your trip, travel has been proven to strengthen the relationship. It gives yourself and your partner an opportunity to share in a common goal. Just staying in a different, free environment of all your daily obligations tends to get in the way that will help reignite romance and intimacy. It will give you both the opportunity to reconsider some issues that will often start an 2016- in a safe, romantic setting. Couples who regularly travel together have reported having more effective communication with each other than those who don't. You will never see the same worldThe biggest symbols one can experience as they immerse themselves in the travel lifestyle realize that not everyone thinks the way you do. Not everyone lives the same way that you do. Different cultures contain different philosophies and priorities. Breathe, relax, enjoyGrowing up in a place where results are expected immediately, I have not lost with the idea of waiting, I mean, what's going on? I ordered it and I want it now. Obviously impatience was smeared on my face. The server who ordered me asked me ever so naïve, Why do you look upset? You have a few more minutes to enjoy life before you get your food. He's right. Why am I sad? I have nowhere to stay. So I took his advice. I took a deep breath, breathed all the beauty that surrounded me. Patience is a virtue. And when you travel, you have no choice but patience. Learn to roll with punchesNot everything goes according to plan, everything will definitely go in the wrong direction. When you are traveling, you are particularly vulnerable to these risks, with very little security if things happen not to go your way. This can be incredibly unnerving the first few times around. This may even prevent some decisions from continuing. But if you can hack it and grab hits when they arrive, you will eventually develop the patience of saints. Bad things will happen; Let them. You'll find another way. When things don't work out, not only do you have to be patient, but adapt as well. You must be able to recall and strategically, or at least accept the situation at hand and roll with it. It's not a situation but your reaction In a series of positive effects, your increase in patience and adaptability will in turn make you a kinder, less cynical person. Because at this point, you get it. We're all human beings, doing our best to get through it. So just stay cool. Conflicts will arise, and the way you choose to handle them will determine the outcome. Alternative forms of communication Everything new and unfamiliar seems scary. Especially when you are traveling abroad, especially if you are traveling alone. If you are anything like me, you indulge in the slightly abrasive blow of cultural shock. Everything is so foreign, so unbelievably different. This can make communication difficult. I really don't speak their language. Most likely, I will not become fluent overnight or anywhere in the near future. But I can still alleviate my struggles by learning a few key phrases in the language of where I visit to get by in everyday life. More likely than not, I'll butcher the pronunciation. The average person will get the gist of what I'm trying to say and appreciate the effort—regardless of poor performance. Non-lingual communication will become your saving grace. You will develop the ability to communicate your meaning without words. If you don't realize it, you can start reflecting the behavior of the people around you to establish a foundation of common ground. In this short time, you are development. You've chosen new styles that will move on to your current personality and habits. This experience literally becomes part of you, changing the way you think and how you behave.
